O operative Bocieties. No subject is more in eresting to the political economist than Co-operative Societies; none more suggestive to those who cousame and those who labor. Really, Government itself seems to be nothing more nor less than a luge Cooperative Association to which each member of the body-politic contributes something annually in taxes and gets in return protection for his life and property. The co-operative society, however, to which we propose to draw attention is simply a new development of social science, -- one of these new social discoveries that will be found in the unknown future to work wonders for the happification of the human race. The discovery is yet but imperfectly known, even to NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT THE these best acquainted with it; but what to known gives abundant promise of the feture. No one who looks into society can fail to see a greater body of men employed as distributors than need be required, under different circumstances.
All these surplus distributors have to be fed, clothed, and housed at the expense, but not wholly, of those engaged as producers in one pursuit or another. nore there are of them the greater is the burden imposed on the producer; and the fewer the distributors the more the producer has for himself. Hence viewing the matter in this light, co-operative supply food, clothing, &c., to their members at a lower price than they could be supplied from an independent store-keeper, and the members as a matter of course Ex Steamer California. save a great part of the profit that the independent store-keeper would put in his pocket. The world, however, is not yet litted up so as to have co-operative IMPERIAL, IMPERIAL, IMPERIAL FAMILY, portion of society will have to submit to the necessity of supporting more distri-bators than under different circumstances would be necessary. But where it is posoperative stores, it ought to be the duty of the statesman and economist to encourage their establishment. Everybody

Four-mile House, knows that the wealth of the rich manufacturer is simply nothing more nor less than the profit that he has made from off the labor of the artisans employed by him. Hence another department of co-opera tive associations step in to keep all the wealth in the hands of the artisans that otherwise would go into the pocket of an employer. This is done by the artisan becoming his own employer—rather by a number of artisans working together and dividing the total proceeds of their work that each has done, instead of divided it with a capital-ist-employer. The success that has attended institutions of this kind both in Europe and Great Britain is wonderful; and points clearly to a future when the uses of capital and the rights of labor will be correctly understood-and much better than they are to-day

To give our readers an idea of the extent to which co-operative associations are worked in England and Wales, we append the following interesting summary made by one of our exchanges, from a recent return to the Imperial ent:

"As elaborate return about industrial and ep-operative societies in England and Wales was issued towards the close of the recent session. The whole number of such so session. The whole number of such societies registered up to the end of the year 1860 was 1,305; 67 new ones were placed on the list hast year, making together 1,375. Of that number 406 appear to have been dissolved, and 153 have neglected to send up their annual statements. The following statement embraces 149 societies, with their figures up to the end of 1870: The total number of members was 349,113, the admissions during the year were 42,314, and the withdrawals 11,964. The amount of there could read the 21,964. The amount of share capital credited 21,964. The amount of share capital credited during the year was £783,059; the amount debited, £562,835; the total capital on the 31st of December, 1870, was £2,034,261; lean capital at the end of the year, £197,129; cash paid for goods during the year, £7,458.-600; received from customers in the same period, £8,202,00. The average value of steck-in-trade during the twelve months, £912,000. Hence the stock enverse to hear £912,000. Hence the stock appears to have been turned over nine times between the 1st of January and the 31st of December. The ef January and the 31st of December. The expenses were £335,327, or rather more than 4 per cent, on the money paid across the counter; interest on loans, £92,333; and allowance for depreciation, £42,817; total of the three items, £470,477. This brings the expenses up to 5‡ per cent. The entire liabilities of the 759 societies are placed at £2,403,902; the entire assets at £2,649,429; the balance over liabilities in favor of the societies would there-fore be upwards of £245,000. The value of buildings, fixtures, and land bevalue of buildings, fixtures, and land be-longing to the various societies is stated to be 2962,276. The disposable net profit real-ised from all sources during the year is put at £555,435. The dividends declared amount-ed to £483,687, of which £16,523 was allowed to non-members; £4,775 was devoted to educational purposes. 155 societies are registered for Lancashire—many of them very large ones. We note a few whose dealing with their sustemers exceeded £100,000 each society during the year. Bury Co-operative Provision, £155,000; North of England Co-operative Wholesale, £678,000; Industrial Co-operative, Oldham, £123,000; Rochdale Co-operative Cotton Spinning, £166,000. This, as the name implies, is not a store, but a manufacturing enterprise. In Yorkshire 158 societies are recorded. The first very large concern here is of the ordinary trading type Halifax Co-operative Flour Mills, £136,000; Magifax industrial Store, Grocery, Drapery, &c., £182,000; and the Sowerby Bridge Flour Mills, £166,000. Co-operative associations do not spread in the metropolis. One great success has been achieved by the Civil Service, who have two societies—one under the CAPTAIN. to non-members ; £4,775 was devoted to eduvice, who have two societies—one under the Limited Liability Act, the other returned in this paper. It numbers 2,410 members, of whom 678 joined last year. The transactions exceeded £492,000."
